

S: Before you were coming here, you had decided to have cats, or...

T: No, no, no.

They just happened naturally, they start coming one day. I never had cats before in my life. And it is not because I didn't like them, I just didn't know.

In Spain it is not common to have a cat, because maybe you know people are used to less cats or they just have dogs or.

But I saw many cats in Japan, and I have friends have cats, but I never had my own one. And I never consider cats as pets also. You know, I see them more like free animals, so I never thought of the idea of buying a cat and having that as a pet. Maybe because I am not used to, you know. In my country more dogs are pets, but not cats, which is probably wrong idea. And dogs are also free animals too.

So anyway it just happened naturally. They decided to come one day and keep coming and coming and you know. At the beginning, it was more like, you know, for me, was like curiosity you know. They never have come before, I have been living in this house for many years. Suddenly they start coming. Oh, OK. You are also like the company and something new.

I wasn't thinking they will stay or I wasn't thinking I will even give them names or. You know. Basically I was really thinking very much to accept, I saw them. Oh that's funny. You know. What can I give them for food? I didn't know also. You know. You start like this, something new. Things happened.

You like cats?
